

Author Guidelines

The Journal of China and International Relations welcomes contributions offering informed and insightful analyses from scholars worldwide that stimulate the scholarly debate on contemporary China in the nexus of its new role in the current transnational era of international relations and international political economy. Interdisciplinary in scope, JCIR provides analysis of important China-centred political, economic, social and cultural topics. Special encouragement is given to those who want to develop China-oriented theories of international relations and international political economy.

Authors are requested to abide by the following guidelines:

Guidelines for manuscript preparation

Formatting

- All articles should be submitted in Microsoft Word compatible file formats
- Please use font 12 of Times New Roman at all times. The text should be single-spaced with 1.5-line spacing

Length

- The standard length of the paper should be no more than 8000 words, including notes and references. In some cases a longer manuscript is allowed, but papers exceeding 9000 words will not be accepted

Abstract and Keywords

- An abstract not exceeding 250 words in length should be included with the submission, as well as a list of keywords

Quotations and illustrations

- Please use double quotation marks for quotations in the main text. Quotations longer than approx. 2 lines should be indented without quotation marks
- All graphics such as illustrations, tables and diagrams should be incorporated into the manuscript and should not be submitted as a separate file. All graphics must be numbered –

e.g. “Figure 1”, “Tables 2-5”. Captions for graphics should be included in the manuscript and written immediately below the graphics in question, including the source where relevant

Language

- For submissions to the English-language edition, manuscripts should be written in either British English or American English; not a mixture of both. Manuscripts must be written in English at an advanced academic level. Authors who are not native speakers of English are advised to get professional editing assistance prior to submitting their manuscript. JCIR provides a light proofreading of the accepted manuscripts, but cannot undertake to offer linguistic editing
- If using Chinese quotations, concepts, titles, etc. in the English manuscript and/or the reference list, authors are encouraged to use both Chinese characters as well as pinyin if possible

References

- JCIR uses an adapted version of the Harvard in-text reference system, namely (author, year) and (author, year: page number) for direct quotes. E.g. (Scott, 2012) and (Scott, 2012: 34). Please see our reference guidelines here for further details
- Footnotes should be used sparingly and only for explanations or extra information, not for references. Footnotes must be written with numbers (1, 2, 3...)

Blind peer review

- In order to ensure a double blind review of submitted manuscripts, authors must replace their name in the manuscript with “Author”. However, it is not necessary to anonymise references to the authors’ previous works

Submission

- Authors are requested to submit their articles electronically to the Editor by using the Journal’s online submission and tracking process at <http://journals.aau.dk/index.php/jcir/author/submit/1>. To make a submission to the Journal of China and International Relations, you must have a user account and register yourself as an author, by filling out the form on JCIR’s registration page at <http://journals.aau.dk/index.php/jcir/user/register> in order to be enrolled as an author, or the login page at <http://journals.aau.dk/index.php/jcir/login> if you already have an account and are registered as an author. Please see the Journal’s Authors’ Guidelines for Online Submissions at <http://journals.aau.dk/index.php/jcir/about/submissions#onlineSubmissions> for an overview of the submission process and a guide on how to complete it and upload your files.

- All correspondence with the Editors, including notifications of decisions, will take place via email

If you have any questions regarding the above guidelines, please contact Journal Secretary Lisbeth Rieshøj Amos at amos@cgs.aau.dk
